Track One: Still the One for Accelerating Patent Examination in the US?

By: Lori M. Brandes, Ph.D.

Speed is everything in the business world. The fastest company to market wins a competitive advantage. However, investors are often reluctant to back new products that do not have patent protection, and backlogs at the US Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO) can delay the grant of a patent by years.

To help inventors obtain patent protection more quickly, the 2011 America Invents Act (AIA) established a new expedited patent review program called Prioritized Examination, or "Track One."

It should come as no surprise that the home of the Bundesautobahn has multiple mechanisms to speed up patent prosecution.

And since the average pendency of a European application is approximately four years[i], patentees will look to these mechanisms to aid their market entry and expansion strategy.
